Meet the Google Guys

Google co-founders Sergy Brin and Larry Page are still just in their early 30s.

Page grew up in Michigan. His father was a computer-science professor at Michigan State; his mother taught computer programming.

When he isn't working, Page spends his time staying fit (his latest passion is windsurfing). He loves music, he likes going to concerts. He played the saxophone when he was a child.

Brin was born into a Jewish family in Moscow. He left Russia with his parents in the late 1970s and settled in the U.S. Brin's father teaches applied probability and statistics at the University of Maryland; his mother works at NASA.

Brin from an early age was fascinated with numbers; his father gave him his first computer, a Comodore 64, when he turned 9.

Brin's other love is gymnastics, and he studied flying trapeze at a circus school in San Francisco.
